Volume 1 Defending China's fight against coronavirus On Monday, February 19, 2020, an airplane carrying the Chinese president, Xi Jinping, and the Chinese Premier, Li Keqiang, arrived in the city of Wuhan, where the novel coronavirus first originated. While this sort of meeting in the middle of the coronavirus pandemic is nothing new for China, this time it appears to have had a deeper significance. What's the significance? Xi had arrived on January 25, when the virus was just becoming a global threat, meaning China was dealing with a global challenge that it has very little experience with. In a country where a pandemic had not occurred for nearly three decades, China's virus response showed remarkable agility and determination. It dealt with a deadly new virus in days. It built enough medical facilities to isolate patients rapidly and completely. China kept it out of the wider world for several months, which allowed its early victories to go largely unnoticed. When the virus arrived in Hubei province, one of China's 10 provinces, it spread more widely through the local population. And it didn't stop, even when the Communist Party and government sent a lockdown to the region. During this whole period, the media mostly reported on the virus from the perspective of the government's handling of it. This may be part of the reason why many people had no idea that China's medical system was good enough to handle the crisis. But that has changed. Now the government is challenging the idea that it was mishandling the virus, instead portraying the virus as a self-inflicted wound on China's medical system. Xi's visit on Monday, and the portrayal of his visit that followed, were designed to reassure the rest of the world about the Chinese system's capabilities. It's one of the reasons why he has been accompanied by the Chinese Premier. Views about China on the coronavirus Coronavirus is not just the problem of China But the coronavirus is a problem in China alone. Other countries are affected by the virus, but there is no evidence to suggest that the virus is a more dangerous threat to them than to China. It is true that Chinese hospitals are struggling to deal with the virus, but it is also true that those 2d92ce491b
