In one case, a Chinese student spent $32,400 on a year's worth of tuition and a house in a Saskatoon neighbourhood to receive more opportunities. There were problems from the start, according to the report. Preliminary investigations by The Canadian Press and Global News show the university, with 11,000 students, has one of the highest rates of international students of any university in the country, yet it gets few of the benefits that are traditionally associated with Canadian universities. The main privileges, for instance, are the chance to work and have access to the city's high-paying jobs, without having to pay the same high tuition rates. Some students have complained that the administrators have been less than forthcoming about the study, which could lead to access issues if the results are not publicly disclosed. An example highlighted in the report was a group of Chinese students being allowed to work as research assistants at the university. That could present a conflict of interest for an institution that is supposed to be apolitical and independent, said report author Dr. Richard Trussell, an assistant professor of sociology at the University of Victoria. "They can get into research institutions, on either side of the spectrum, so that's a pretty big conflict," said Trussell. "The university's own ethical policy says (it) 'must not act in ways that could be perceived as compromising objectivity.' So they have a sort of institutional constraint against acting in ways that might compromise objectivity." However, there are challenges. Saskatoon is currently a hotbed for tech innovation, with
