DownloadBing is releasing the Google (A.K.A. "evil empire") Glass version of the app tomorrow (Tuesday) for Android (and iOS). It's not clear if this is because they have to get Google to approve this version of the app, or if they have actually developed the app completely independently of Google Glass. I think that Google Glass has become more of a train wreck than Microsoft's first smartphone attempt, so I have a feeling that we will see an independent Google Glass app. Microsoft is currently working on a similar app for Windows Phone and I'm sure that will hit the market at some point. If the app is going to hit the market before

Google Glass hits the market I would bet on Microsoft being the first to hit the market with this type of application. Bing MyGlass will be released to the public tomorrow on the Google Play store. It's free and you can expect to find it in the Windows Phone app store in the coming months. If you are using a Windows Phone, you can follow the steps below to get the app onto your phone. The app works as a WebKit and
