technology for dry cleaning You are using an old version of Internet Explorer and it is not supported any more. Please upgrade Internet Explorer or try with another browser like Chrome or Firefox.

A revolutionary process that uses nanomaterials We've heard about the industry's advances in cleaning fabrics, but have you heard about a new cleaning technology that uses nanomaterials? The European Association for Cleaning Science Cleaning 2020 initiative is dedicated to cleaning products and technologies, which have been developed, or to be developed, within the next 10 years. This initiative highlights the challenges and rewards in the cleaning industry as it faces a huge challenge to deal with the cleanliness requirements of a growing population. Tests have shown that manufacturers of micro-fibres must now reduce the number of fibres below the current 500 per gram. The challenge is enormous because the number of fibres in one gram of clothing is still in the region of 1000. Most washing machines also offer a mode where only dirty washing is cleaned. The result is that manufacturers have to find a way to clean the textiles that are still present on the clothes after the cleaning process is completed. The dry cleaning industry will be transformed when a new process, which uses nanomaterials to effectively clean textiles, becomes available. Dry cleaning, which uses the latest technology in the cleaning of textiles, has remained the same for decades. This revolutionary process will offer customers a far more effective, faster and more economic method of cleaning textiles. Advantages of dry cleaning The advantages of dry cleaning are many: The quickness of the process; The non-polluting nature of dry cleaning; The environment is protected, because of the less harmful nature of the process; If the fabric is still in good condition after the cleaning process, the cleaning process can even be repeated; To conclude, it is true that dry cleaning is expensive, but the benefits are many. Its lower cost will make it affordable to all; as customers, we will all have the opportunity to enjoy this important service at low prices.

There is no more room for old technology. Now that we have a more environmentally-friendly way to clean textiles, the dry cleaning industry must make use of these new techniques. This is a
