"I have always been in love with film. The way a movie can produce emotions that words alone just can't," said director Lee Unkrich. "The main thing that I love about movies is that, in a way, it's not a story. You go in there and you're not really supposed to understand what's happening. And then, you just have to experience it." Exploring the real-life struggles of different characters in two very different worlds is the overarching theme behind "Toy Story 4." In the film, Buzz Lightyear (voiced by Tim Allen) is once again attempting to discover what it means to be a toy. That quest becomes even more intense for Woody (voiced by Tom Hanks), the cowboy doll who accompanies Buzz on his adventures. "Just to make sure I wasn't becoming a fan boy, I'd ask Tim to describe this new Woody," Hanks said, laughing. "I would ask, 'What's he like?' He would say, 'Well, he's a little further away from you, a little taller. He's a little more mature. He's more serious.' I'd say, 'Well, you don't sound like Woody.'" As Woody gets older, the toy is faced with new challenges. He comes face-to-face with Andy (voiced by John Ratzenberger), a 10-year-old boy who has outgrown him. Meanwhile, as he attempts to stay with Bonnie (voiced by Madeleine MacIntyre) and her family, Woody takes a voyage to a small town named Radiator Springs (named after the owner's RV, which was famously featured in the Disney classic "Cars"). This animated adventure is also serving as an homage to filmmaker John Ford. Lee Unkrich, who directed the animated "Toy Story 3," said he was fascinated by Ford's 1946 film "How Green Was My Valley." "My wife loved it, and I thought that was a really cool story," Unkrich said. "It's a story about the American

In 1915, Tharpe arrived in Chicago from Meridian, Mississippi, with no music education. The next year, she began her studies at the Boarding High School of Music (BHSM) under Ernest Hogan, who recognized her exceptional talent. Tharpe became a great gospel legend, a master of interpreting the music of Martin Luther King Jr. Her vast talents and stature in music continue to inspire many young singers around the world. From the '60s through '90s, she was a pillar of the Black Arts Movement, an activist for women's rights and sexual freedom, and a staunch opponent of the Vietnam War. She recorded more than 300 songs and appeared on stage, television, film and radio as a singer and solo performer. She also played the guitar with a style sometimes characterized as boogie, and occasionally also the harmonica. Some critics have called her the most influential gospel artist of her generation. She is considered by many to be the greatest gospel singer of all time. In the 1940s, Tharpe recorded gospel songs with brother guitarist and musical director Johnny Shines. She had a long career as a solo performer, most of which was on her own record label, Rosetta Records, with its first releases in 1952. Tharpe was the star of the Sunday afternoon gospel television programs He Is and We Are Each Other's Sunshine. After a hiatus, she was active again in the 1970s, appearing on Bob Hope's show and performing at Carnegie Hall. She toured until 1990, after which she
