Anastomotic leakage is a major complication of low anterior resection for rectal cancer, and can result in local recurrence, distant metastasis, and even death. It mainly occurs within three months after surgery. The purpose of this study was to analyse the incidence and risk factors of anastomotic leakage. Between 2002 and 2004, 288 patients underwent low anterior resection for rectal cancer in the Digestive and Oncological Department of the Hospital Clinico San Carlos, Madrid. In 28 of the patients (9.6%), anastomotic leakage was diagnosed; in 6 of them (21.4%), it was classified as severe, and required surgery. The median follow-up period was 18 months (8-26). Factors associated with anastomotic leakage were age, body mass index, ASA score, type of rectal operation, and tumour size. No patient with anastomotic leakage died. Anastomotic leakage is a common complication of low anterior resection for rectal cancer and is associated with increased morbidity.
