Pretransplant evaluation of the donor with aortic arch atheroma: does surgery add to the prediction of future graft performance? During the pretransplant evaluation of potential heart donors, aortic arch atheroma is found in less than 10 percent of aortic specimens from donors who are subsequently diagnosed with ischemic heart disease. The role of aortic atheroma in predicting the outcome of heart transplantation is unknown. We hypothesized that the presence of aortic atheroma in a donor would be associated with impaired cardiac function after transplantation. A total of 41 pairs of heart donors with aortic arch atheroma (study group) and age- and sex-matched donors without atheroma (control group) were studied. Each group was divided into 2 subgroups: heart donors with and without aortic arch atheroma
