Is there a way to use the compare-filename method to do case insensitive file matching? #!/usr/bin/perl use strict; use warnings; use Net::SFTP; my $sftp = Net::SFTP->new($ARGV[0]); while (my $filename = $sftp->getline($ARGV[1])) { if ($filename =~ m/$ARGV[2]/i) { print $filename; } }
A: You can use =~m/.../i with the =~ operator. $filename =~ m/$ARGV[2]/i
Alternatively, if your shell is a POSIX shell (and I would guess that it is), you could use a POSIX comparison, which you can mix with =~: my $filename = $ARGV[2]; while ($filename =~ /$ARGV[2]/) { print "$filename "; } You can test the equivalence of $ARGV[2] using the test operator, too: my $filename = $ARGV[2]; while ($filename eq $ARGV[2]) { print "$filename "; } Myocardial infarction and angina pectoris: a comparison of SPECT with CMR. Myocardial perfusion scintigraphy is used to diagnose ischaemic heart disease. We compared single photon emission computed tomography

(SPECT) and cardiac magnetic resonance (CMR) in the diagnosis of myocardial infarction and angina pectoris. Patients with suspected myocardial ischaemia were included. Exclusion criteria were previous myocardial infarction and contraindications for magnetic resonance imaging. Scint
