What's New in the Easy Gallery Generator?

The Gallery Generator is basically a simple web server written in Java. It has an embedded HTML browser that shows thumbnails of image files that are submitted by other web browsers. You can also make the browser display links to the next/previous image and the main page. The Gallery Generator is very easy to use, but it has a few limitations. It is not very efficient at generating the thumbs, and it only accepts image files in JPEG format. If you have other image formats you may be able to convert them. If you have a large number of pictures, it may take a few minutes for the images to appear on the main page. Installation: Download, unzip and then copy the file to your web server. Open a web browser and go to the path on the server where you placed the file. Once you are there, click the link to load the Gallery Generator. If everything is working, you should see the main page. If not, check the PHP Logs in the folder where you downloaded the Gallery Generator. The Gallery Generator also requires a database and a table for the images. By default, it will use a local MySQL database and a table called images. To see the database and table options, click on the Database tab on the main page. If you need to convert images to JPEG format, use the 'jpegconvert' command line utility which you can find at Upgrading: You can download a newer version of the Gallery Generator by clicking on the link labeled 'Latest Release' above the Gallery Generator main page.
