Q: How to execute a Python script from Bash? Is there a way to execute a Python script from bash? I've looked around and there is nothing that describes how to do this. A: The most common way to execute a Python script from bash is to use the subprocess module (The usage is: #!/usr/bin/env python import subprocess subprocess.call('script.py') You will have to replace "script.py" with the name of the script that you would like to execute. Q: Libraries for gRPC on GAE Is there some library that implements gRPC protocol on Google App Engine? I found grpc-java and grpc-web-server, but they both use OpenSSL (which is not supported on GAE). A: Disclaimer: I am the author of gRPC-Web-server and gRPC-Java The gRPC Web Server is compatible with GAE by using HTTPS certificates, and as such is not restricted to OpenSSL. The gRPC Java implementation is compatible with GAE in the sense that it uses a very simple core library written in Python that compiles to Java bytecode on GAE. The specific libraries that are used to do the actual RPC requests however are written in Java and most likely would require some changes to the code to work on GAE. If you were to write a different code base on your own, which would allow you to create your own RPC servers, then your dependencies would include supporting libraries that implement the protocol in a language that can be used on GAE. There are certainly libraries that implement a gRPC server in Java. There is no gRPC gateway on GAE at this time. It is discussed here. Q: Importing a named reference section into Simulink Is it possible to import a named reference list into Simulink? I was initially going to create a named reference file like so: But then I discovered that since this is a list, it cannot be imported into Simulink. Is there an equivalent of passing the name of a source (eg text or integer) to the import block? A: If your list are only within Simulink,
