Torrent File.Recycling material from electronic equipment into other products is an attractive goal for obvious reasons. If conventional materials are used, they may be a source of pollution or may simply be toxic or have poor strength. In contrast, materials with a matrix of one type of ceramic or glass may offer certain superior properties when compared to the same material processed from a different base material. Ceramics and glasses are the major constituents of ceramic and glass products, respectively, and the bulk of ceramic and glass items now exist in a pre-formed state. This is particularly true for the creation of parts for transportation and other heavy duty uses, such as, for example, turbine engine fan blades and jet engine nozzles. Presently, fan blades and nozzles are, and will continue to be, created out of metal alloys or a combination of metals and composite materials. There exists a need for an improved process of creating ceramic and glass components and more specifically a process of creating ceramic and glass components in larger or complex shapes. There is also a need for a process that results in the creation of parts that are cost effective while possessing at least equivalent 3da54e8ca3
