Java based web UI to run curl commands and perform SOAP calls to datapower appliance from browser More Information: [url removed, login to view]

Requirements: DataPower appliance should be configured with HTTP proxy settings [url removed, login to view] Apache HttpClient is required to be able to connect to datapower appliance [url removed, login to view]

Overview: This tool is a java based web tool to perform SOAP calls to the datapower appliance. It's a web interface that uses curl to communicate with datapower appliance. All curl commands you can use from the terminal. ...as we change this. Could someone describe how this works so I can verify the steps as I go along? A: It looks like the device does not respond to the commands you are sending via curl when you have the web browser enabled, but does respond when the browser is disabled. To do this from the terminal, you'd have to start off with just the device without the browser enabled (web server disabled) and then try to access the device using the browser by stopping the web server first (if it's a web server). A: I had the same exact problem. I was working through the Tivoli Datapower Deployment Guide. The thing is, you can't debug the web server if you don't have it running. I wrote a simple C program to connect to the web server, and that seemed to work. I used x86_64 version 9.0.0, and I used the query to find out the version information. You can also do a simple curl to the server, which you can use to debug.

WordPress 3.4.1 upgrade problems - A data store error - kevinwiseman I just upgraded from WordPress 3.3.2 to 3.4.1 and some of my plugins stopped working. I don't know if it's related but as I was upgrading I restarted my computer which also caused a cache error that I found by checking the WordPress error log. I'm not sure what the cache error is or why the plugins stopped working. I'm not sure if this is important but I am using the Yoast plugin. ===== smoyer Try moving everything out of your public_html/uploads directory and back (including your themes and plugins) and see if it makes any difference. If you're using a lot of plugins (as opposed to one that has a lot of plugins), I'd suggest deleting them one at a time, trying to get one to load and test. As the one you're using seems like it would probably have problems, try disabling it. If you have multiple sites, I'd suggest upgrading just one,
