What's New In Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.1.1)?

Sunday, August 31, 2008 My friend, Leigh, reminds me of the Good Samaritan. She's been seriously sick for a long time now, and it's finally time to go back on the medicine that made her so sick to begin with. Yesterday, she was experiencing serious abdominal pain, coupled with night sweats, and she could barely see, despite wearing her contacts. She also didn't have any energy to even get up off the couch. I told her that she needed to call the hospital - because I knew that something was wrong and that this would be her last chance to get better. She tried to call her doctor, but he wasn't in. She left a message on his voice mail, and told him that she was having severe abdominal pain, along with her other symptoms. When I got home from work, she was lying on the couch, weak as a kitten. I held her hand, and rubbed her feet - all the while telling her that she just had to hang in there, because the doctors would know what to do.

Her stomach was hurting so much - I couldn't believe she could just be lying there, dealing with so much pain. I also couldn't believe that she didn't have the strength to even get up. After a few minutes, the phone rang, and I grabbed it. It was her doctor. I explained to him that she had been in pain, and I'd been holding her hand - all the while telling her to hang in there - and that she needed to come in to the hospital. I'll admit, I was a bit of a basket case on this one. I felt like I just wasn't doing enough, and it was just one of those moments that I realized how truly blessed we are. I knew that her doctor had to have a full schedule - and the hospital probably wasn't going to take a patient on short notice. So, I began praying to God for answers on how to get this off my friend's back. Within a matter of minutes, she called me back. Her doctor was on his way over to her apartment. She was going to get admitted. We went through the motions of getting her cleaned up - and then we sent him to the hospital.

After he left, she spent the next hour going over the details of her health history, and what she needed to do to get well. She was clear-headed, on top of things,
