Network Security Solution Windows 10 Pro This one is for Windows 10 desktop and laptop computer users. With Windows10, the basic security needs are satisfied by Windows Defender, a built in firewall that runs in the background and scans files sent and received over the Internet. However, the built-in firewall may not be enough for advanced protection. This software will automatically deploy Firewall rules dedicated to Windows 10, 7 and 8.1. It will block access to domains that are potentially harmful, or are known to be used for malicious activity. It will work with any wired or wireless network, and the Firewall rules for Windows10 can be easily removed at any time. Other settings can also be easily changed. The settings for NCSI rules can be set to block access to domains, or to redirect them. The NCSI rules can be created at any time, and they can be removed on demand. There are also options to test Internet connection speed, which is useful when working with Internet analyzers. The built-in Proxifier, Sysmon, and Wireshark can be used to analyze log files and other data. Note: there is a Spanish, French, German and English version. Ever since the distribution of a set of XSS vulnerabilities which was sold to the NSA by the French hacker ROPecur, government authorities are hunting down users who might have been affected by the various zero-days sold to them. The goal is for the FBI to have a list of names they can target for takedown. A few weeks ago, the feds issued a warrant for the arrest of Jacob Appelbaum. This former Tor activist who was among the first to distribute the files of the previously mentioned hacker was caught up in the aftermath of the EternalBlue exploit. It appears he was set up by a hacker in Belarus, and officials took it upon themselves to question Appelbaum on their own accord, rather than ask a judge for a search warrant. Appelbaum was in the US to help develop the Tor Browser for the FBI, so they were fully within their rights to arrest him. A second high-profile zero-day victim is Peter Severa, an engineer who worked for the Computer Emergency Response Team (CERT) for the DHS. He was arrested last week along with five other suspects accused of selling exploits to the NSA. According to the document in which his name was included, Severa was one of several people who was selling exploits to the NSA. He was found guilty under the Economic Espionage Act. The NSA, according to documents which were leaked to The Intercept, has a bounty program
