Adobe Photoshop CS6 One of the most important changes for Photoshop users is the introduction of Camera Raw. Before, users would have to use a third-party product like Adobe Camera Raw or another program that imports the raw image files into Photoshop. But now, Photoshop CS6 can import and process these files automatically. This includes support for 16-bit and 32-bit raw image files, such as TIFF, as well as JPEG, PNG, GIF, BMP, and PDF files. The raw files can be automatically converted to Photoshop Layers just as Photoshop will convert the images once the image is open. Additionally, you can apply color corrections, rotating, and cropping to photos after importing them. The Photoshop CS6 update includes other innovations as well. Like the previous update, the interface has received a makeover with the opening files being navigable by simply clicking on the Open button. Photoshop CS6 also comes with a host of enhancements related to the layers, such as the ability to work with smart objects, bring-overs, and masking. The standard and adjustable workflows are streamlined to make the process of working in Photoshop CS6 easier. However, you can still create complicated and unique workflows by accessing Photoshop's large amount of tutorials on the Web. One of the major new features of Photoshop CS6 is the inclusion of video editing capabilities, specifically in Final Cut Pro. More than just a simple straight-up video editor, Adobe's Photoshop CS6 integrates seamlessly with a number of video editing programs. Rather than being a straightforward video editor, Adobe's Photoshop CS6 integrates into Final Cut Pro, Premiere Pro, and a host of other video editing programs and lets you work on it using the same interface. A new feature in Photoshop CS6 is the ability to edit remotely. This allows you to work on a project from virtually any other location. It also gives you the ability to access the files from any location as well. Remote working is meant to be a collaborative process that allows project owners to work from anywhere on the planet as long as there is a computer and an Internet connection. Q: CSS animation: how to make it wait for a certain event to occur? I have a CSS animation that I want to only start when the user has scrolled to a certain section of the page. I tried to use both a timeout on the animation and a boolean variable that gets set when I scroll but neither one seems to work. Here is the code I am using: `#splash { position: fixed; top: 0; width: 100%; height: 100vh; background-image:url('../images/splash.jpg'); background-color: #d0d0d0; opacity: 0; -webkit-animation: fadein 3s; -webkit-animation-iteration-count: infinite; -webkit-animation-fill-mode: forwards; -moz-animation: fadein 3s; -moz-animation-iteration-count: infinite; -moz-animation-fill-mode: forwards; -o-animation: fadein 3s; -o-animation-iteration-count: infinite; -o-animation-fill-mode: forwards; -ms-animation: fadein 3s; -ms-animation-iteration-count: infinite; -ms-animation-fill-mode: forwards; -webkit-animation-delay: 4s; -moz-animation-delay: 4s; -ms-animation-delay: 4s; -o-animation-delay: 4s;`
