XC-IPInfo is a Windows software that displays the local and external IP-addresses currently used by your computer. You can get and copy the IP-address to the clipboard to use in other applications. The program also displays the names of the hosts currently accessing the Internet through your computer. You can configure the program behavior before the PC boots, if you have to. XC-IPInfo comes with several useful features such as statistics report, external IP forwarding, and customizable System Tray icon. XC-IPInfo is light-weight software and it doesn't hamper system performance. System requirements: 32-bit or 64-bit Windows operating system. Additional information:Download XC-IPInfo / Bo-IPInfo. XMRF is an iOS friendly application designed to help millions of people find the best and easiest method to convert their iTunes music into

M4A files. It is a free app, which doesn't require any purchases. The fact it is so easy and quick to use should help to end the madness of media file conversions. You can now edit music files and convert any file format like MP3, WMA, OGG, FLAC into the new M4A file format. The Creative Zen X-Fi is packed full of impressive features and touches and I don't want to share my review in just one post, so I have split it up for easy reading and easy sharing! Here's the link to the full review: My review might not be as in-depth as some of your recent ones, but I promise it is still great value for money in terms of providing practical information for anyone looking to buy the X-Fi. What's X-Fi? The X-Fi is a mainstream high-end speaker system with a couple of notable advantages. First of all, it has an in-built 50 watt speaker/headphone amplifier built into the right speaker. This means that the stereo effect is amplified to give a more powerful speaker and the left speaker gets a boost to make it even louder. This means that you won't have to buy a separate amplifier like I did. Secondly, it has an aluminium housing, meaning that it is cheaper to make than the traditional silver housing. In my opinion this is probably the main reason why it's so popular these days. With the X-Fi you will get a lot of features in a b7e8fdf5c8

What's New In XC-IPInfo (formerly Bo-IPInfo)?

XC-IPInfo is a lightweight Windows solution that shows you both the local and the external IPs your computer is using at any given moment. Although it may all sound like a very basic application, XC-IPInfo packs more features than you usually expect from such a tool, all of them available via a minimal GUI. When you first launch XC-IPInfo, the application places an icon in the System Tray and, according to the standard configuration, it's enough to simply move the mouse cursor over this icon to see the external IP address. The main window of the program however shows both the external and the local IPs, as well as the host name, with dedicated options to instantly copy any of them to clipboard. The configuration screen allows you to set up the program behavior in specific key moments after launching it. During loading for example, XC-IPInfo can automatically copy any of the displayed details to clipboard all by itself or don't perform any action, while other two options are available after loading. The System Tray icon can too be configured to show the aforementioned addresses, as well as the online or offline states. It's more or less obvious that XC-IPInfo doesn't hamper system performance, but instead it works like a charm on all Windows versions and it doesn't need administrator privileges to get along with Windows 7 workstations. All things considered, XC-IPInfo is a very effective and easy to use utility. It comes with more configuration settings than you even need from this kind of app and remains very friendly with system resources all the time.
