Motion capture data is captured by an array of 27 cameras attached to the players' suits. This technology is more than just an entertaining video. HyperMotion uses the player's real-life movements to perfectly mimic their on-screen behavior for more intense, realistic gameplay. This new feature brings for the most realistic moves ever imagined in FIFA games. The HyperMotion technology has been created through the latest research conducted by an independent group of experts in different fields in order to truly give players the realism and control that they need. This technology promises to be one of the most beneficial features in the history of the FIFA franchise. The new feature is already available on Xbox One version of the game. Its introduction for other versions is scheduled for the coming days. More than a video game In the video below, you will see our Community Manager Teppy with Alex Hunter discussing some of the new features brought to the FIFA community by EA SPORTS and the introduction of HyperMotion. A screenshot showing the new camera pitch motion and relationship between each camera location and the pitch will be shown in the video.
