[Bilateral Charcot-Leyden crystals in a case of sarcoidosis]. A 49-year-old woman with sarcoidosis presented with bilateral, painful exophthalmos and galactorrhea. Histological examination of a paranasal sinus biopsy showed abundant non-caseating epithelioid cell granulomas with acid-fast bacilli. In addition, numerous Charcot-Leyden crystals were seen. Ophthalmologic findings were specific for sarcoidosis. Treatment with 40 mg daily of prednisone for 2 years resulted in remission of ocular symptoms and a decrease in the size of the crystalline structures. Sarcoidosis may cause intraocular lesions that mimic other uveal and anterior segment diseases; the examiner should be alerted to this possibility.

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a reproducing system which reads out information from a storage medium, and particularly to a reproducing system having a function of erasing unrequired information or fragment data already reproduced.

2. Related Background Art As digital video and audio signals become more and more popular, data such as the original video and audio data for recording are increasing in number. Further, it is becoming common that the data reproducing devices for reproducing video and audio data from such original recording media as optical discs, optical magnetic discs or magnetic tapes are required to have the function of reproducing not only the video and audio data recorded on the recording media, but also a large amount of additional information other than the video and audio data. In a conventional reproducing device of this type, the reproducing device reads out the video and audio data recorded on the recording media together with the additional information. However, it is necessary to record the additional information on the recording media at all times together with the video and audio data. It is therefore necessary for the conventional reproducing device to have a data buffer memory to temporarily store the video and audio data, the additional information, and the like. If the storage capacity of the data buffer memory becomes full, it is necessary to clear the entire contents of the data buffer memory, which would require a long time and therefore a cost. A solution to the problem is to consider the utilization of the memory by the reproducing device itself.

Multimedia About this page In the past, there was a variety of audio and visual media that was in use, many of which are not necessarily compatible with current technology. A growing number of virtual reality technologies is part of the Virtual Reality movement that want to immerse users in a simulated world, but don't want them to have to buy all new media to view the virtual environments. Instead they want to use existing media sources that have been created for the current viewing experience. The idea being is that different technologies can be blended together seamlessly. Imagine, if you will, a physical "camera" with an attached light that would attach to a user's hand while inside the virtual environment. The user would still see with the same visual capabilities, but would begin to see things in a different way, with different sounds and smells. In short, VR would give them a new way to process the real world. VR is a much sought after technology for a variety of reasons, it is the next great frontier in technology and entertainment. It has been called everything from the new reality, to the next revolution, and more. It is no accident that it is up there in the air with the Star Trek's technology. It is coming quickly and in a variety of forms. VR Virtual Reality (VR) is not a new technology but rather a new way to view and process information, and today there are a number of new technology developments coming up that are expected to play a big role in VR's future. VR is to be found in a number of unusual locations. It is not just being used for gaming, it is also being used for marketing, medical and education. Interactive TV Interactive TV is the opposite of VR, where a user interacts with the environment instead of viewing it. Traditional TV, with a remote control in your hands is now being challenged with things like tablets and game consoles.
