Dodgeball JPN.rarHow the attack on Pearl Harbor changed the course of the 20th century March 22, 2019 7 How the attack on Pearl Harbor changed the course of the 20th century By Thadeus O. Pittman / The Nation The attack on Pearl Harbor changed America irrevocably — and in ways that have reverberated to this day. It was the first open use of indiscriminate violence against a foreign power to achieve a political end, a terror-bombing without an effort to pinpoint the target, a case of national treachery that was personal: President Franklin D. Roosevelt had been left unharmed, but he had been a witness to the attack from afar and was committed to fighting back for the moment. FDR’s rhetoric about showing the world the face of American democracy proved devastating in war and after — the “unlimited” war and the “solemn engagement” of World War II, first launched in his fireside chats, were framed as a validation of the democratic tradition and of the justness of the global fight against totalitarianism. In this way, the attack on Pearl Harbor accelerated the Cold War and consolidated US power in ways that contemporaries and historians agree have shaped the world since. Related: In the streets of London. Detroit. Rome. Beirut. All have been bombed into rubble, and all are victims of the same mentality that empowered the attack on Pearl Harbor. In some ways, the principle is ancient, but by the close of the first decade of the 20th century, that mindset had become so deeply embedded in the United States that even a president could declare to Congress “we have nothing to fear but fear itself.” In the process, that perspective altered the course of the 20th century, and continues to influence the world today. The attack on Pearl Harbor didn’t change the United States, as our war with Japan did, but for those who witnessed it, the fatal, synchronized blast proved that American democracy, a conception that decades earlier had seemed bankrupt, was a resilient and uplifting force in the world. All this emerged not in a vacuum; the attack occurred amid a violent decade that saw the beginnings of great-power war, the formation of

The South Korean military said on Monday that a North Korean guard tower at a border village that appeared to have been abandoned had suddenly exploded, injuring three people, including two South Koreans. The South Korean military blamed the incident on a live-fire exercise by North Korea, but said it had no immediate comment on whether the cause was accidental. The South Korean military and the South Korean government held rare joint news conferences. Lee Cheol-woo, a South Korean reporter with the Defense Ministry, told reporters that a North Korean guard tower at a northernmost village along the buffer zone between the two Koreas had exploded. An apparent mine detonated, he said, leaving two South Koreans and one North Korean guard wounded. The South Korean military said it was not immediately clear whether the guard tower was destroyed or whether it fell as a result of an explosion.s shoulder and maybe we trade him in for another, get a late second rounder in return. What about a linebacker, maybe we could trade him to Cleveland for a second rounder or a third rounder. Or a WR or kick returner, the great thing about us not being a playoff team is we can have a lot of flexibility with who we can play. We are not handcuffed to a guy and can always deal him out if we think he is not a fit. And if we don't think he is a fit, we can get a pick or a guy to bring in. So keep in mind that we have flexibility and we are not limited to one or the other. We are good to go, whichever way we go. JJ: Now that we are safe for the next couple years, is this the year you think we actually make a push for a playoff spot? Or is it just a pipe dream that we ever get to that point again? "I think we are in a pretty good position to make the next couple years something special. The good things about us as of right now are we do not have a lot
